In the beer saloon of Nich. Lafonts, on the Colerain Pike, Cumminsville, vesterday, a mainter, named Thomase Voss got into a quarrel with another man, and they were both ordered from the house. At this Voss drew a large knite and proceeded to carve Lafonta in the head, neck, face, hands and back. His wife coming to the resoue, he made a dash at her and then ran away, taking refuge behind Cluxton's store, where he was found by Officer Hammel and locked up. Lafonta not being in Court this morning the case has been continued.

Dan. O'Connell.

O'Connell defended a man tried at the O'Conneil defended a man tried at the Cork Assizes for murder. The case for the prosecution was exceedingly strong. The principal witness had picked up the hat of the man on trial near the body of the murdered man. The prisoner's name was Pat Hogan. The hat was produced was Pat Hogan. The lat was produced in court. O'Connell asked to see it, and it was handed to him. "Now," said O'Connell to the witness, "you are quite sure this is the hat you found?"

"Yes, your honor counsolor."

"And the hat is in the same state now

t was then?"
"Oh, yes; just the same."
O'Connell looked inside, and spelled

Pat Hogan.

"Do you mean to say the name was in the hat when you found it?"

"I do—on my oath," said the witness, confidently.

"You are certain of that?"

"Quite sartin."

"Now you may go down,"oried O'Con-nell. "My lord," he said, "there must be an acquittal: there is no name at all in the hat! The jury at once, under the Judge's direction, found the prisoner

Judge's direction, found the prisoner "Not guilty."
When applying to change the venue of the case from Dublin to Tralee, the motion was resisted by a very unprepossessing-looking barrister, whose politics were averse to Kerry-men in general, and O'Connell's in particular. This gentleman contended "there was no necessity to send the case to Korry—a county very remote—where he had never been, and was very inconvenient.

"I can promise my learned friend," replied O'Connell, "a hearty welcome; and we'll show him the lovely Lakes of Kiliarney."
